

The heart of your ketubah, the text you choose should reflect your values and vision for the marriage you want to build.

We have created these texts to align with ideals and beliefs that ring true for many couples we work with, but we are always able to incorporate a text that you have written, or amend one of our options to better fit you.

All texts © Foreverie Paper 2018-2022

Secular

Formal

On the _____ day of the month of _____, in the year _____ in _____, _____, _____, daughter of _____ and _____, son of _____ and _____ entered into this Covenant of Marriage. We pledge to one another our hearts, affection and fidelity for all of our days. We will offer care and support in times of uncertainty, celebration, illness and calm. We shall honor our differences and cherish our sameness. We promise to use our awareness of time fleeting as a reminder to be fully present with one another and to find joy in all of the experiences we share. We will be accepting of change in our relationship and one another, and communicate with openness and honesty. Let us cultivate tenderness, romance and humor, that our marriage may be a place of comfort, inspiration and laughter always. Together, let us build a peaceful home, family and community on foundations of trust, respect and love.

Mindful

Standing together on the _____ day of _____, in the year _____ in _____, _____, _____, daughter of _____ and _____, son of _____ and _____ vowed to one another: From this day forward, we will greet the new gift of each day, each moment, together. May our union, our fidelity, and our love be a steady foundation for the beautiful unknown that awaits us. We promise to continually offer each other the gift of presence and attention. We will honor change and growth, in ourselves and each other. We will make gracious space for imperfection and discomfort alongside joy and ease. We will cultivate a home, family and community grounded in respect, gratitude, and awareness of our innate interconnectedness with all life. We will care for and revel in our bodies as they age and change, and be careful stewards of the earth and its gifts. Most importantly, when we forget to do all of this, we will allow ourselves the grace to begin again, over and over, for the rest of our days.

Social Justice

Standing together on the _____ day of _____, in the year _____ in _____, _____, _____, daughter of _____ and _____, son of _____ and _____ vowed to one another: As partners in life, love and the pursuit of a more just world, we pledge our faithfulness, our attention, our utmost care to one another for the rest of our days. We will be steadfast in tending to a love without conditions; a love grounded in service, in the mundane rhythms of home life; a love that gracefully accommodates the unexpected, which welcomes imperfection; a love that both anchors and inspires. We will listen more than we speak, practice humility, and create a home where all feel welcomed and accepted as they are. May we remind one another to work passionately in service of our highest values without forgetting to care compassionately for our own simplest needs. We embrace the individual and shared journey of growth and change that we embark upon today, honoring the lessons and traditions of our families as we shape a new future together, guided by our love for one another, the earth, and all life.

Reform

Formal

On the _____ day of the month of _____, corresponding to _____, two-thousand twenty one here in _____, _____, _____ and _____ entered into this Covenant of Marriage. Standing under the chuppah, we pledge to one another our hearts, affection and fidelity for all of our days. We will offer care and support in times of uncertainty, celebration, illness and calm, lifted by the strength and love of our families and ancestors. We shall honor our differences and cherish our sameness. We promise to use our awareness of time fleeting as a reminder to be fully present with one another and to find joy in all of the experiences we share. We will be accepting of change in our relationship and one another, and communicate with openness and honesty. Let us cultivate tenderness, romance and humor, that our marriage may be a place of comfort, inspiration and laughter always. We will draw inspiration from our Jewish heritage, values and rituals as we build a peaceful home, family and community on foundations of trust, respect and love.

Mindful

Standing together under the chuppah* on the _____ day of the month of _____, _____, corresponding to the _____ of _____, two thousand twenty one, in _____, _____, _____ and _____ vowed to one another: From this day forward, we will greet the new gift of each day, each moment, together. May our union, our fidelity, and our love be a steady foundation for the beautiful unknown that awaits us. We promise to continually offer each other the gift of presence and attention. We will honor change and growth, in ourselves and each other. We will make gracious space for imperfection and discomfort alongside joy and ease. We will cultivate a home, family and community grounded in respect, gratitude, and awareness of our innate interconnectedness with all life, woven with Jewish ritual and tradition.

We will care for and revel in our bodies as they age and change, and be careful stewards of the earth and its gifts. Most importantly, when we forget to do all of this, we will allow ourselves the grace to begin again, over and over, for the rest of our days.

Social Justice

Standing together under the chuppah* on the _____ day of the month of _____, _____, corresponding to the _____ of _____, two thousand twenty one, in _____, _____, _____ and _____ vowed to one another: As partners in life, love and the pursuit of a more just world, we pledge our faithfulness, our attention, our utmost care to one another for the rest of our days. We will be steadfast in tending to a love without conditions; a love grounded in service, in the mundane rhythms of home life; a love that gracefully accommodates the unexpected, which welcomes imperfection; a love that both anchors and inspires. We will listen more than we speak, practice humility, and create a home where all feel welcomed and accepted as they are. We will carry on the Jewish tradition of tikkun olam, in our actions and our faith. May we remind one another to work passionately in service of our highest values without forgetting to care compassionately for our own simplest needs. We embrace the individual and shared journey of growth and change that we embark upon today, honoring the lessons and traditions of our families and our Jewish heritage as we shape a new future together, guided by our love for one another, the earth, and all life.

Interfaith

Formal

On the _____ day of the month of _____, corresponding to _____, two-thousand twenty one here in _____, _____, _____ and _____ entered into this Covenant of Marriage. Standing under the chuppah*, we pledge to one another our hearts, affection and fidelity for all of our days. We will offer care and support in times of uncertainty, celebration, illness and calm, lifted by the strength and love of our families and ancestors. We shall honor our differences and cherish our sameness. We promise to use our awareness of time fleeting as a reminder to be fully present with one another and to find joy in all of the experiences we share. We will be accepting of change in our relationship and one another, and communicate with openness and honesty. Let us cultivate tenderness, romance and humor, that our marriage may be a place of comfort, inspiration and laughter always. We will draw inspiration from our Jewish and _____ heritage, values and rituals as we build a peaceful home, family and community on foundations of trust, respect and love.

Mindful

Standing together under the chuppah* on the _____ day of the month of _____, _____, corresponding to the _____ of _____, two thousand twenty one, in _____, _____, _____ and _____ vowed to one another: From this day forward, we will greet the new gift of each day, each moment, together. May our union, our fidelity, and our love be a steady foundation for the beautiful unknown that awaits us. We promise to continually offer each other the gift of presence and attention. We will honor change and growth, in ourselves and each other. We will make gracious space for imperfection and discomfort alongside joy and ease. We will cultivate a home, family and community grounded in respect, gratitude, and awareness of our innate interconnectedness with all life, woven with Jewish and _____ ritual and tradition. We will care for and revel in our bodies as they age and change, and be careful stewards of the earth and its gifts. Most importantly, when we forget to do all of this, we will allow ourselves the grace to begin again, over and over, for the rest of our days.

Social Justice

Standing together under the chuppah* on the _____ day of the month of _____, _____, corresponding to the _____ of _____, two thousand twenty one, in _____, _____, _____ and _____ vowed to one another: As partners in life, love and the pursuit of a more just world, we pledge our faithfulness, our attention, our utmost care to one another for the rest of our days. We will be steadfast in tending to a love without conditions; a love grounded in service, in the mundane rhythms of home life; a love that gracefully accommodates the unexpected, which welcomes imperfection; a love that both anchors and inspires. We will listen more than we speak, practice humility, and create a home where all feel welcomed and accepted as they are. We will carry on the Jewish tradition of tikkun olam, in our actions and our faith. (Insert a sentence here about the tradition of service in you or your partner's faith tradition). May we remind one another to work passionately in service of our highest values without forgetting to care compassionately for our own simplest needs. We embrace the individual and shared journey of growth and change that we embark upon today, honoring the lessons and traditions of our families and our Jewish and _____ heritage as we shape a new future together, guided by our love for one another, the earth, and all life.

All texts © Foreverie Paper 2018-2022